WEEK IN REVIEW:

This week I concentrated on working on my Career Module. I began by doing all the required readings so that I could better understand what would be required. Afterwards I began mapping out my touchpoints and seeing where my strengths and weaknesses were. Afterwards I completed the Flowchart since it practically tied into the Career Modules content. Now this was a little difficult since there really wasn't much specificity on how we should go about completing the Flowchart so I just went online to create a simple accurate flowchart that would get my view across. So far my planned "school-time" seems to be working in that I haven't really come close to being late on any of my assignments except during one time when my internet was off for almost a whole day. But other than that one hiccup this class is steadily becoming more and more clear to me.

REFLECT AND CONNECT:

I feel good about this past week. I feel I performed better than I had the previous weeks in that I managed my time better so I wasn't scrambling to get everything done on time. Also I began some serious time and research in what it is that is my Personal Brand. I have been looking into my touchpoints to get some help by getting others to answer some questions about what I put out there. This is going to help me strengthen myself by becoming aware of what persona I am putting out when I interact with others. I'm not saying I am going to change it or anything because I feel that I am always the same with anyone no matter the circumstance. Many people say that a person is a multi-faceted jewel that is constantly showing different sides depending on what is happening. This may be true for most but I have gone through my life slowly shedding any aspect of myself that I felt is false until what is left is perhaps not just one side but far less than others. These small truths that I find out about myself will help me to realize any strengths and weaknesses that only an outside perspective can perceive. All in all this will help in my future development by allowing me to further work on myself.
